

Villa Julia

design Javier Mariscal / 2009

“One of children’s favourite games is to build themselves a house using a big cardboard box, four stakes and a blanket or any other object at their disposal. The most important thing is to have a house on their own scale, a private space made to their measure, where children can hid and play sheltered by walls and roof, where only children can be invited in, while admission to adults is forbidden. Children can enjoy assembling this house by themselves (with help of an adult), then founding a place for it and decorating it as they prefer, colouring the drawings on the façades.”
